HONGKONG, 13TH APRIL, 1864.

WE hear some singular stories of Gordon and his force—not idle stories
observed, but tolerably well authenticated.
We have but a poor faculty for telling the recollections of Chinese people,
which he had of a-ming the mandarins readers with full details of what we are to narrate.

The force which Gordon commands present moment, should control of the
observed, but tolerably well authenticated.

The force which Gordon commands
present moment, should sardon say that artillery was the arm which should be depended on, and consequently he altered the constitution of the force entirely. Then again, he kept the troops actively employed, and it proved no child's play to be a Chinaman.

The lack of pay and the ill treatment of the local authorities, soon caused all Ward's officers to leave the force, and in fact induced some of them to join the Taipings. The troops which so much pains had been taken, both by the French and the English to drill, left in disgust one by one, until at the present moment we are assured there are only 200 men left. Gordon's force is now nearly all consists of Taiping prisoners whom he has captured and pardoned, and even these he cannot keep together, but has continually replenish from every fresh batch of captives. Daily marches and marches at a very early hour will indeed, and the force becomes daily more ineffective and miserable: in addition to which, its fidelity is not in the least to be relied on.

Gordon is the soul of its, and there is no doubt that both his own men and the Taipings look on him with a great deal of awe. He has a vast deal of trouble with his troops, owing to their looting propensity, and his constant habit of selecting delinquents. The only way to get rid of this—his only orders the culprits to stand on rising ground and he makes their comrades shoot them.

The Taipings although they dread him seem disposed to play with him. Many times, surging, furious against him, they have simply looked at him, have not fight him. They pretend to shave the head, but instead of doing so, shave the breadths of two fingers all round—this mode of shaving is distinctly understood by the Taipings, and simply means that they are to be kept in the camp, and that they will return to their family. There are no doubt a great many spies and traitors in Gordon's forces who give the insurgent Chiefs all possible information.

One of the tales which Gordon lately captured, and released with five hundred men, out of his force, every one of whom had been a Taiping prisoner. He left these men at the head of Major Kichman, and although he had no confidence in their faithfulness, but he could do nothing to prevent it.

On one place the insurgents surrendered, the Chief stipulating that he should be pardoned and sent to Shanghai with all his valuables. Gordon sent him accordingly under a guard, which on the way he was surprised to find the body of the Chief, who had assisted in the defeat of the Futai's brother. The officer in charge of the guard of course thought all was well, but not the smallest moment after the body of the Chief, who had assisted in the defeat of the Taipings, is known by the sobriquet of Cockeye, and he is very devil to get. He arranged a meeting with the Chief, who had surrendered and who was going to Shanghai, but with his valuable property.
